"We need someone who re-emphasizes education. We don't have that drive, that energy to make our education the best in the world. That's what's going to improve the economy in the future. We need to have everyone be good in reading, writing, and math.

I think that with online education, I don't think regulations have caught up with how things have changed. There needs to be more collaboration between states so online companies don't need to worry about doing business across state lines."
